Introduction

The Constitution contained here heralds the dawn of freedom in Namibia. There is broad agreement that the independence of Namibia marks a great hallmark in the end of the colonial era, and that the constitution adopted by the chosen representatives of the Namibian people is one of the most important documents in the history of Africa. It must not be forgotten, however, that Namibia's Independence Day has been unnecessarily delayed for decades due to the intransigence of South Africa, recognised in 1966 by the United Nations as illegally occupying Namibia, and by the apathy of the international community.

It has been 12 years since UN Resolution 435 was passed, setting out the process for independence for Namibia; it has been 24 years since the UN General Assembly declared South Africa's occupation to be illegal; and it has been 75 years since Pretoria assumed control of the colony of South West Africa from Germany. During that time South Africa was required by the League of Nations mandate to provide for the well-being and development of the territory's inhabitants as a 'sacred trust of civilization'. Freedom has come too late for those Namibians who died from hunger, disease and malnutrition because of the poverty forced on them by apartheid policies, and for those who suffered cruelly and died in the long struggle to win their right to self-determination.

These decades of neglect were made possible by international indifference with respect to illegally occupied Namibia. Now that independence has been won, the global community must take up its responsibilities to ensure that the Namibian people have the chance to achieve the development so long denied them under South African rule. The time has come to stand in support of the new government by creating constructive development assistance relationships. Africa's last colony has become its youngest democracy. Let us welcome her with open arms.

Inaugural Speech by His Excellency, Dr. Sam Nujoma, President of the Republic of Namibia, Windhoek, 21st March, 1990.

Honourable Master of Ceremony,
Your Excellencies,
Heads of State and Government,
Distinguished Guests,
Dear Compatriots,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

For the Namibian people and for myself, this day, the 21st of March, 1990, is the most memorable and indeed the most emotional moment in the annals of our history.

This solemn hour is the moment which our people have been waiting for, for more than a century. This is the day for which tens of thousands of Namibian patriots laid down their lives, shed their precious blood, suffered imprisonment and a difficult life in exile. Today, our hearts are filled with great joy and jubilation because our deepest and longest yearning has been realised.

Honourable Master of Ceremony, Sir, for the past 43 years or so, this land of our forebearers has been a bone of contention between the Namibian people and the international community, on one hand, and South Africa, on the other. The Namibian problem has been at the centre of bitter international dispute over the last four decades. The United Nations and other international bodies produced huge volumes of resolutions in an attempt to resolve this intractable problem.

However, it pleases me to state that we are gathered here today, not to pass yet another resolution, but to celebrate the dawn of a new era in this land and to proclaim to the world that a new star has risen on the African continent. Africa's last colony is, from this hour, liberated.

It is, therefore, profoundly momentous and highly joyous, for the Namibian people and myself, that the highest representative of the international community – the Secretary-General of the United Nations – together with the State President of South Africa, and the Namibian nation, which I am honoured to lead, are able to announce, here today, to the world that a definitive and final solution to the protracted Namibian problem has, indeed, been unanimously reached by these three parties.

For the Namibian people, the realisation of our most cherished goal, namely, the independence of our country and freedom of our people, is a fitting tribute to the heroism and tenacity with which our people fought for this long-awaited day. We have been sustained in our difficult struggle by the powerful force of conviction in the righteousness and justness of our cause. Today history has absolved us; our vision of a democratic state of Namibia has been translated into a reality.

With regard to the international community, the achievement of Namibia's independence today is, we believe, a welcome and laudable culmination of many years of consistent support of our cause. The world's demand for our country to be allowed to exercise its inalienable right to self-determination and independence has been achieved. We express our most sincere gratitude to the international community for its steadfast support.

As for the government of South Africa, it can be said that the decision to accept the implementation of Resolution 435 has been the first demonstration of political will to find a negotiated solution to the problems of our region. Furthermore, President de Klerk's proclamation here today that South Africa has reached a final and irreversible decision to relinquish control over Namibia is an act of statesmanship and realism. This, we hope, will continue to unfold in South Africa itself.

Honourable Master of Ceremony, Your Excellencies, Distinguished Guests, Compatriots, Ladies and Gentlemen, I seize this opportunity to point out that the protracted process of negotiating an agreement on Resolution 435 and struggling for its implementation has been difficult and, at times, acrimonious. It was only perseverance, forbearance and commitment which helped us to see the process through to its logical conclusion, namely, the birth of the Namibian nation which we are here to witness.

Against this background, it is heartening for the Namibian people and I, to know that our independence has been achieved under conditions of national consensus and international unanimity. The impressive presence here today of so many world leaders and other dignitaries is a clear testimony to the fact that Namibia's achievement of independence is an event of great world importance. For us, this is yet another reason for celebration.

With respect to the important question of national consensus, I am glad to announce that, following the independence election last November, the various Namibian political parties have been able to work together in the Constituent Assembly, where we formulated and adopted a Constitution acceptable to the broad majority of our people.

Against this background, Honourable Master of Ceremony, Distinguished Guests and Dear Compatriots, I am indebted to the Namibian electorate for giving SWAPO an absolute majority, thereby enabling it to form the first government of the Republic of Namibia. In the same vein, I am grateful to the members of Namibia's Constituent Assembly for the confidence they have placed in me in electing me as the first President of the Republic of Namibia. I pledge to do my utmost to uphold the Constitution of the Republic, and to honour the trust which the Namibian people have bestowed upon me to lead this new nation at this critical juncture.

To the Namibian people, I would like to state, on this solemn and historic occasion, that our nation has blazed the trail to freedom. It has arisen to its feet. As from today, we are the masters of this vast land of our ancestors. The destiny of this country is now fully in our own hands. We should, therefore, look forward to the future with confidence and hope.

Taking the destiny of this country in our own hands means, among other things, making a great effort to forge national identity and unity. Our collective security and prosperity depend on our unity of purpose and action. Unity is a precondition for peace and development. Without peace, it is not possible for the best and talented citizens of our country to realise their potential.

Our achievement of independence imposes upon us a heavy responsibility, not only to defend our hard-won liberty, but also to set for ourselves higher standards of equality, justice and opportunity for all, without regard to race, creed or colour. These are the standards from which all who seek to emulate us shall draw inspiration.

Master of Ceremony, Sir, in accepting the sacred responsibility which the Namibian people have placed on me, as the first President of the Republic of Namibia, I would like to bow and pay homage to our fallen heroes and heroines, whose names Namibia's present and future generations will sing in songs of praise and whose martyrdom they will intone.

In conclusion, I move, in the name of our people, to declare that Namibia is forever free, sovereign and independent!

The First Cabinet of the Republic of Namibia

Introduction

On 21 December 1989, President-elect Sam Nujoma announced his 'shadow cabinet' for the new administration. The team includes a Prime Minister and sixteen cabinet ministries, plus an Attorney General, Auditor General, National Planning Commission and Minister for State Security. As victors in the November elections, SWAPO had the prerogative to select its cabinet from entirely within its own ranks, and indeed, the familiar names of long-standing SWAPO leaders number prominently among the cabinet members chosen. As a sign of the party's firm commitment to national reconciliation, members of the Constituent Assembly from other parties and non-SWAPO Namibians with particular expertise and of high standing in the community were also invited to join the cabinet structures.

In some of the most crucial ministries for action during the immediate post-independence period, SWAPO chose to look beyond party lines. Two non-SWAPO ministers were appointed: Otto Herrigel for Finance; and Gerhard Hanekom for Agriculture, Fisheries, Water and Rural Development. And two non-SWAPO Deputy Ministers were also appointed: Vekuii Rukoro of the NNF in the Ministry of Justice; and Reggie Diergaardt of the UDF in the Ministry of Trade and Industry. A cabinet position was also offered to the DTA, but this was turned down in the interest of maintaining the DTA as an independent opposition force.

In order to smooth out the transition to a new administration, the shadow cabinet members were called together on January 10, 1990, by the President-elect and were told that they should start immediately with the task of acquainting themselves with the existing department structures and functions through liaison with senior civil servants, and they should prepare for the necessary restructuring of ministries, redefinition of parameters of operation and drafting of staff and budgetary requirements.

Cabinet meetings would normally be restricted to the President, Prime Minister and 16 other ministers, but it was noted that deputy ministers would also periodically be invited, especially those from other political parties so that they could report back to their parties on the plans and progress of the government.

The result of this preparatory work was that a multi-party team of Namibian government officials was already on the way toward being firmly established by the time Independence Day arrived. Office space in the Tintenpalast, seat of the previous colonial authority, was already being occupied by new ministries, and where necessary other locations were identified for ministry premises and made ready for use. Thus, the new Namibian cabinet was in many respects already assuming the reins of power before its mandate began.

The Constitution of the Republic of Namibia

Introduction

On 9 February 1990, Namibia's constitution was unanimously adopted by the 72 member Constituent Assembly (CA). This marked the end of 80 days of frank discussion, lively debate, and grudging compromise. In the end, all parties had to make concessions on their original proposals, but all got enough in return to allow them to adopt the constitution by consensus. Many of the smaller parties feared that SWAPO would totally dominate the process because of its majority position, but the tone was set on the first day the CA was convened (21 November 1989) when CA Chairman and SWAPO Prime Minister designate, Hage Geingob, proposed that the CA adopt the Constitutional Principles of 1982 as the framework for the constitution. This having been adopted, the minimum criteria for acceptance by the UN were satisfied.

Crucial to the proceedings were the submission of constitutional proposals by the parties and the reconciling of differences between them. On 4 December 1989, SWAPO and DTA submitted their constitutional proposals. Three areas of dispute emerged: SWAPO favoured an executive President, a single chamber parliament, and a non-proportional representation electoral system; while DTA favoured a ceremonial President, a bi-cameral parliament, and proportional representation. Proposals submitted the following day by ACN, NPF and UDF, and two days later by FCN and NNF, were in agreement with the DTA proposals, with the sole exception that NNF favoured an executive President. By December 20th agreement had been reached on the necessary compromises: the constitution would call for an executive President, a bi-cameral legislature, and proportional representation.

The Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders and Internal Arrangements, chaired by Dr. Tjiriange (SWAPO) and comprised also of Mr. Ruppel (SWAPO), Mr. Staby (DTA), Mr. Rukoro (NNF) and Dr. Tjitendero (SWAPO), worked out the details of compromises reached and referred them to the team entrusted with writing the draft constitution, composed of three South African legal experts - Prof. Wiechers, Advocate Chaskalson and Prof. Erasmus. One of the universally-acclaimed improvements to the original proposals was the deletion of a clause allowing for preventative detention. Other guarantees of human rights were enshrined in the constitution through an unchangeable bill of fundamental rights and the abolition of the death sentence.

Among the most central provisions of the constitution are included the following:

- Executive power is vested in the President, who is chosen by the National Assembly the first time and subsequently by universal adult suffrage, for a five year term in office that can only be repeated once;
- Legislative authority rests with the 72-member National Assembly, which is elected by proportional representation and initially is comprised of the Constituent Assembly;
- The National Council or House of Review, a second chamber of parliament to be elected within five years, will consist of representatives of regional councils and municipalities and have the power to review and delay proposed legislation;
- Separate police and defense forces will be headed by presidential appointees, with military service being compulsory although conscientious objection is allowed;
- An independent judiciary will guard over the long list of fundamental rights and freedoms, including the prohibition of discrimination based on racial, ethnic, religious, gender or economic grounds;
- The sovereign, secular Republic of Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands illegally claimed by South Africa, is a multi-party democracy with mixed economy.

Following lengthy discussion and refinement of the text and terminology contained in the draft constitution, the final version was adopted by consensus on 9 February 1990.

Preamble

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is indispensable for freedom, justice and peace;
